Size: See chart below for approximate sizes - based on the diameter of a climbing hold

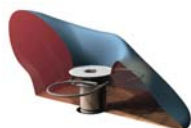

Material: There are 2 base materials for manufactured climbing holds - see below

PU PolyUrethane. Urethane is very durable; not prone to cracking or chipping. Well suited for all types of walls, especially highly featured walls. Because of this durability, holds can be formed into more unique shapes.

PE PolyEster. Polyester is the traditional material for holds; texture is dryer; more rigid than urethane; suitable for flat featured and plywood walls.

Fixing: Cap Head Bolts, Button Head Bolts, Countersink Bolts or Screws. The marking DF recognizes a Dual Fix attachment which uses either a Cap Head or Countersink bolt.

EPS

EPS-Explosion Proof System: In the event of a hold breaking during use, the patented EPS captures the bulk of the hold which reduces the risk to people below of being struck by flying debris.

Certification: EN 12572-3: Holds approved to meet the EN Standard by the German Inspection Authority TUV. These holds have been subjected to systematic rupture, resistance and safety tests.

Certification: EN.1176.1: Holds that meet the standard for children 2 years old and up.

Installation:

Climbing holds take time to 'bed' into the wall. We recommend that you tighten the hold using a torque wrench adjusted to 35 Nm. In the first days and weeks after initial fixing, the hold may require tightening on a regular basis. These holds may also naturally reposition or spin regardless of the tightening level applied. This could even occur when the hold is being used for the first time. After a period of non-use, verify the tightening level of each hold before reusing the climbing wall.

Safety:

Climbing holds are designed and manufactured to be used in a specific way. In particular, holds require careful attention during both installation and removal, and must be regularly checked and maintained. The purchaser must take full responsibility at all times for the fixing and use of the climbing hold, ensuring that it is only used for the purposes which it is designed. The manufacturer or supplier will not accept any responsibility for damage, injury or death through improper use.
